GHOST STILL ACTIVE
IN THE TECH OFFICE
All Efforts to Capture the Airy Visitor Have Been Futile.

There's nothing getting more interesting day by day, or more mysterious, than the airisher, in THE TECH office. The ghost has left a sentence which is supposed to contain the key to the mystery. The sentence read: "It will be published in Monday's TECH.

'Can any bright student supply the missing words?"

We are sorry to announce that the trap failed to capture the gaseous visitor the morning of Tuesday. Several attempts to reproduce today's sentence were made, but they all failed to give up the secret or remain a solution forever. It seems that this sentence was published a few days ago, and that the scheme may be to give us a clue to solve this mystery.

The whole scheme of mystery had something which read "Have you a secret?"

The TECH staff man left is as follows: "It will pay me at any price."

Mr. Buhler thoroughly discussed the various coal fields, making clear just what realises produced the best grades of coal. There are several local licks.

Besides the researches the management is busy with the arrangement of the schedule. The prospect of performance of the Coal Testing Committee is definitely settled.

Last Saturday the entire book was read through by the east at the same rehearsal. Some of the lines in the new Cast are very humorous, and there are several local licks.
