NAVY TRAINING FOR COLLEGE STUDENTS

Not Required to Enlist But Must Observe Requirements of State Contingent of M. T. A.

That the students may have further information concerning the training of the system of college men on board the battleship, we have in the following a description of an actual talk, the following excerpt from a communication from the Chief of Naval Operations, which has been given in Boston to a group of students.

The chief of the group was one of those who were most eager to hear the talk. He was chosen from those recommended by the authorities of the Institute, and he was not compelled to enroll, but was merely required to agree to serve the laws of the Navy and of the ship, and to obey the orders of all officers. He was an old man, but he was also well qualified to be a general, and he had served in the Navy for many years.

It was decided to have two men to work at the station, and both of them were selected from the group.

The man who will have opportunity to receive training in all the departments, as well as in the usual work of the ship, will be entitled to be selected to receive uniformed service. They will also be allowed to specialize, and as far as practicable the choice of the student will be left to the student.

The men will be required to pay for their own clothes and food. The cost of the food will amount to about forty cents per day. The outfit, consisting of one blue drill uniform, two white drill uniforms, two white twills, two so-called underclothing uniforms, one blue drill shirt, one suit of blue trousers, a hankock jacket, two overcoats, and two overcoats.

COMMUNICATION.

To the Editors of THE TECH:

Greetings! Also cursings! How long do you intend to keep up this foolishness about a ghost appearing in your offices and writing various calamitous messages on your type-writer? If you are interested in the whole procedure you had better see me personally and I am afraid to send my opinions through the mail sacks. In spite of myself I am wrought up and am fast becoming wonderingly yours,

There's a Handsome Dicount for YOU.

WIRELESS MEETING.

All members of the New England Wireless Society are reminded of the regular monthly meeting of the society which is to be held tonight in the Jefferson Physical Laboratory, Harvard College. Dr. Chaffee of that University is to address the meeting on the subject of his latest experiment. The meeting is expected to last three hours, and the laboratory will be open to the public.

CHESS CLUB TOURNEY.

The Chess Club announces that a tournament will be held among the members of the organization. The entries for this tournament close at 3 P.M. on March first. Those who enter must pay their second term dues before any matches can be played.

The drawings for the match will be published in Techno's TECH. The club expects to have the matches completed by the second term.
