T. C. A. RECEPTION

Get-Together Evening Replete With Good Talks and Music.

Last night a large and varied assembly of Tech men met in the Union, and enjoyed the evening to their heart's content. There were gathered in the hall large numbers of men from all classes, the upper classes especially, and the latter, together with the addresses and entertainments of the evening, helped greatly to make the affair a real success. The Freshman class was not lacking in representation, for quite large was the number of new and strange men, who, after the event was over, left with the Union, looking not as strangers but as real enthusiasts Tech men, with the spirit of Science Conspired, the publication of the Institute, in the current issue presents for its leading article "The Doom of the Lobster" by John Ritchie, Jr. This is a comprehensive statement which sets forth some very plain facts. The main one of these is that commercialism has reduced the number of this crustacean till extinction is imminent, while all legislation in the way of protection has been biologically absurd. Mr. Ritchie notes that if anything is to be done, it must be the sober and scientific treatment of the situation, while the matter must be complicated by competitions and varying requirements to that any adjustment must be international in character. The article is authoritative, in that Mr. Ritchie is one of the few who has traveled in the country in the neighborhood and allied sciences of zoology, and takes kindly to the description of the facts of the case. The article is the first to make an absolutely plain statement of the matter.
