PROF. PALMER LECTURES

Begins Series Of Lowell Institute Talks.

Professor George H. Palmer of Harvard delivered the first of the series of lectures this year of the Lowell Institute in Huntington Hall.

"Some Types of English Poetry" was his general subject. At this lecture he dealt mainly with the nature and importance of poetry. The relation of fact to poetry, he said, is unimportant as affecting the enjoyment that one gets in reading it. Poetry is the result of the desire of the poet to impart to us the feeling that he himself has felt.
The office of the poet is to pick out of the same total of experience some small part and at the same time to see that he does not leave some little bit that is as fragmentary as when he finds it. The poet must also get away from conventionalism; his language must be personal; his style must be his own. Professor Palmer's last and most important point was that in a really great poem, the mere succession of small parts and at the same time to
