PRATT SCHOOL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE

The place of honor on the Massachusetts Avenue front of the New Technology has been assigned to the

and Marine Engineering, which was ded by the late C. H. Pratt of Boston.

Mr. Pratt is one of the men who without personal acquaintance with the officers of the Institute left most of his estate to a department for which the Institute is celebrated the world over, but which is costly to maintain. Professor Cecil H. Tug-biddy is the head of the department of Naval Architecture, and how cele-bated the school is may be seen from the statement of a German student in the course, that he came to the Institute because there is no school comparable to it in his own country. There is also a son of a prominent Clyde shipowner, who, while a data from page 5) worth went through tackle for tore, Gould made an ac-through center and followed it with 20 more. The latter was not allowed and 17 was obliged to punt. De-son made 30 yards through guard, putting the ball in mid-field once more. The Sophonores punted and Thompson ran back 5 yards. He followed this by 40 yards though tackle in center and the ball from the 20-yard line to the center of the 30-yard line, where Mr. Pratt recovered the ball and scoring a kick. Gould made 15 yards on a forward pass just before the whistle ended the game.
