A Man Of Great Executive Experience Who Understands Need For Technically Trained Men.

By the election of the Hon. W. C. Forbes for life membership in the Corporation of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which was in effect, the name of the family is again connected with the school in which the founder always had so much interest. John M. Forbes, who was an earnest friend of Professor William Barton Rogers and always a benefactor to Technology found place among the early members of the Corporation, and for nearly thirty years, from 1866 till 1892 was a member of the Finance committee. Of late years, W. H. Forbes was made a member of the Corporation in October, 1893, remaining till his death four years later. Since that time the name has been absent from the list, but the members of the family have cared for important Institute matters by lamplight. Mr. Forbes has always taken interest here that one of the first pieces of property in the possession of the Institute was the Farmington House.

The interests that the new member of the Corporation will have will be in line with his great executive experience. Technology has been fortunate in associating with itself men of large experience and of view, and of experience, Theodore N. Vail, one of the best previous examples of one who understood, the point. Governor Forbes further understands the needs of the great school to which Technology is sending out its influence. He is familiar with all the interests of the country's possessions, and knows how necessary are technically trained men in the kind of training that will be most beneficial.

Governor Forbes will make his debut before the Alumni of Technology before the end of the year.
