DEAN BURTON APPROVES T. C. A. NOONDAY TALKS

Says Thursday Meetings Help Students—Pays Tribute To Buran Rand.

In speaking of the work of the T. C. A. The day before, Prof. T. C. A. said that the Association has been more successful in the last year than ever before, and consequently did not accomplish as much as it might have. He said that the pres- ent system of noonday talks, insti- tuted by General Secretary Talbot, has made a great change in the effec- tiveness of the Association. These meetings are admirably adapted to the conditions here. The men get an opportunity to get together at lunch hour when they have nothing else to dis- tract their attention, and listen to speakers who are in the very position that the T. C. A. has become an important factor in student life. It does things which would be greatly missed if left undone.

The Dean also praised the newly introduced system of appointing execu- tive officers for new men. He said that many of the Executive Officers had told him of the valuable help they received from their advisors. He also men- tioned that the T. C. A. is essentially a student organization. It is controlled by the undergraduates, and they are responsi- ble for its success. Moreover, it is so conducted as to appeal to all stu- dents, regardless of sect. Its straight- forward creed should appeal to all stu- dents-Pays Tribute To Williams has been left off the Harvard

DEAN BURTON APPROVES T. C. A. NOONDAY TALKS

Says Thursday Meetings Help Students—Pays Tribute To Buran Rand.

In speaking of the work of the T. C. A. The day before, Prof. T. C. A. said that the Association has been more successful in the last year than ever before, and consequently did not accomplish as much as it might have. He said that the pres- ent system of noonday talks, insti- tuted by General Secretary Talbot, has made a great change in the effec- tiveness of the Association. These meetings are admirably adapted to the conditions here. The men get an opportunity to get together at lunch hour when they have nothing else to dis- tract their attention, and listen to speakers who are in the very position that the T. C. A. has become an important factor in student life. It does things which would be greatly missed if left undone.

The Dean also praised the newly introduced system of appointing execu- tive officers for new men. He said that many of the Executive Officers had told him of the valuable help they received from their advisors. He also men- tioned that the T. C. A. is essentially a student organization. It is controlled by the undergraduates, and they are responsi- ble for its success. Moreover, it is so conducted as to appeal to all stu- dents, regardless of sect. Its straight- forward creed should appeal to all stu- dents-Pays Tribute To Williams has been left off the Harvard

DEAN BURTON APPROVES T. C. A. NOONDAY TALKS

Says Thursday Meetings Help Students—Pays Tribute To Buran Rand.

In speaking of the work of the T. C. A. The day before, Prof. T. C. A. said that the Association has been more successful in the last year than ever before, and consequently did not accomplish as much as it might have. He said that the pres- ent system of noonday talks, insti- tuted by General Secretary Talbot, has made a great change in the effec- tiveness of the Association. These meetings are admirably adapted to the conditions here. The men get an opportunity to get together at lunch hour when they have nothing else to dis- tract their attention, and listen to speakers who are in the very position that the T. C. A. has become an important factor in student life. It does things which would be greatly missed if left undone.

The Dean also praised the newly introduced system of appointing execu- tive officers for new men. He said that many of the Executive Officers had told him of the valuable help they received from their advisors. He also men- tioned that the T. C. A. is essentially a student organization. It is controlled by the undergraduates, and they are responsi- ble for its success. Moreover, it is so conducted as to appeal to all stu- dents, regardless of sect. Its straight- forward creed should appeal to all stu- dents-Pays Tribute To Williams has been left off the Harvard