College Notes

It was the hope and repeated rumor that the name of the donor of the $65,000 chapel at Bates College, Lewiston, would be announced on the day of dedication, but the identity of the woman was not made known yesterday at the school.

Last night twenty Harvard juniors banqueted one of their classmates at the Quincy House in honor of their recent election as a member of the Board of Aldermen in his home city, Woburn. The student, who is but twenty-one years of age, received the highest number of votes ever cast for an academic candidate in Woburn.

More than one hundred students of Wellesley College returning from the West after their Christmas holiday vacation are anxiously waiting a decision of the faculty as to whether they will be punished for late registration. The special train on which they were traveling was delayed by snowfall in the Middle West, and although the railroad authorities rushed it through on short notice, it was impossible to get the train into Woburn in the time allowed for late registration.

On Monday night at one of his lectures, Professor Vernon of the University of Pennsylvania said that the lazier a boy is, the more idle, the more stubborn, immoral or stupid, the greater the reason for insuring the things he must remember and by and think with through the most effective sort of instruction and never-ending review.

The event which this issue commemorates can be regarded as nothing short of epoch-making in its significance. Not only will this co-operation maintain a school of unexcelled standing, but the act of co-operating introduces a new era in education. Heretofore, educational progress has been purely extensive, no thought given to the development of a system which makes for the simplification of instruction and the increase of the results of the effort.

The keynote of the play is altruism, each institution desiring to replace the competitive idea by and thinking of the community. The saving in equipment, while furnishing an enormous advantage to the community, is not by any means the chief gain. Education will be furthered, without additional expense to the Corporation, printed a year before, and grow twice as well, as well without additional expense to the community.

The Associated University of Pennsylvania Clubs will hold its next meeting in Chicago.

The Brown Herald has now returned to a smaller size in accordance with the principles laid down in the interest of the students. The increased size of "dead ads" was cut out of the edition. The penalty for late registration after vacation is heavy. The girls are deserted from their half-year examinations in one full course, and the news space.

The Associated University of Pennsylvania Clubs will hold its next meeting in Chicago.

The Associated University of Pennsylvania Clubs will hold its next meeting in Chicago.

The Associated University of Pennsylvania Clubs will hold its next meeting in Chicago.

The Associated University of Pennsylvania Clubs will hold its next meeting in Chicago.

The Associated University of Pennsylvania Clubs will hold its next meeting in Chicago.

The Associated University of Pennsylvania Clubs will hold its next meeting in Chicago.