work of the surveyor if necessary in regard to his third point the speaker made the statement that a good specification writer is a rarity and he must be qualified not merely to copy clauses from printed examples but to understand the meaning of his statements. Cost estimating may be only an element of successful work, for "without it consulting prices must be paid whenever it is desired to install a heating or plumbing system."

At his office Mr. Emerson has a library of over five hundred catalogues and other pamphlets simply for the purpose of general information. The seventh and eighth divisions closely overlapped. These were laboratory testing of materials and field inspection of the work while in progress. He cited cases where by simple means tests could be and were made to settle questions arising during construction—questions which would cause loss of time and great inconvenience if they could not speedily be settled.

In conclusion Mr. Emerson made an earnest plea for a more complete attitude toward the contractors. This matter, he said, in his own experience had not been difficult for the practical workman is not merely an adjunct to the work but is entitled to some respect.
