We noted engineering as "the science and art of overcoming the resistances of nature, including human nature," and added that it might well be defined as "educated common sense." In touching upon the probable success of an engineer, Mr. Kein emphasized that the quality of leadership meant more than mere scholarship. The field which an engineer may enter is exceedingly broad, the commerce offering great advantages for the future. He stated as his belief that the engineer would in the future be much more in contact with the accumulation and distribution of wealth.

The faculty of the Institute was supported by Professor Havens Russell and Miller. Prof. Havens gave
