As the result of a conference between officers of the Athletic Advisory Council and of The Tech, increased efforts are to be made on both sides to promote co-operation between the Institute's athletics and its organization. Both have been involved by the lack of a uniform system of handling athletic news from the teams to the readers of the paper. As it is ordinarily impossible for a reporter to give as good an account of an athletic event as it could be furnished by a member of the team concerned, the Advisory Council has determined to request the appointment of special publicity representatives from each team, who shall be responsible for furnishing complete and accurate information of all events and whose reports will receive special consideration from the editors. Besides this, the meetings of the Association are to be reported in person by an editor of The Tech.

The Carnegie Peace Endowment Fund has inaugurated a campaign among the leading colleges of the country, for the better understanding of international relations. A squad of five graduate students will be sent about among the different colleges, to organize "International Polity Clubs." These clubs will study the fundamental causes of the European War, with a view to determining what sort of political reconstruction is necessary to prevent the repetition of such an occurrence.

These Polity clubs already exist in the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Manchester, England, and have recently been established at Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Columbia and Cornell. A prize of $100 is offered to that member of one of the clubs, who writes the best essay on the subject, "International Polity Factors in International Affaire.
