labeled, is much easier to acquire than the power of having visions. I do not mean to confine my criticism of our inability to "visions" to chemists nor to men of any one school, but to all of us as a race. It is true, though, that if we could see our defects in this respect we in a school, making a business of training ourselves, ought to be best fitted to correct this defect.

"It is against fear, bluster, too cold logic that I want to warn you, because, as men with the best training available in this country, you are still likely to be least reconciled with your visions."

"There is one more point to which I also want to briefly, but pointedly, refer. It relates to our national preparedness for defence. You are living in practically the only country not now involved in the most costly war in materials that this world has ever seen. You are part owners of an uninsured dwelling, with defective wiring in the garret, a wooden ash barrel alongside the furnace and a leaky gas main in the cellar. No sane American wants war—at least, war in America. Let us be so prepared that we may at will thoroughly defend ourselves, or may, after being prepared for adequate defence, give the keys of our cities and government to some armed applicant in order to insure the peace we want if we wish to."

In pursuing the preparations for defence, we should be holding in our hands the question of choice, which is lost to us if we are negligent. There are prominent people who want peace at any price. This is the incomprehensible fact. I hope most Americans are going to prove much less supine."

At the close of the talk President Wilson rose to announce that the next meeting would be the "War Meeting" which was postponed from October 29 on account of the invitation received from the Engineers' Club of Boston to hear Professor Buchar. The date was set for Friday, December 3rd.

R. A. Miller, chairman of the trip committee, then announced that two trips to the Watertown Arsenal had been arranged for Friday, November 15th, and for a week later, November 26th. The party will start from Copley square at 1.15 o'clock. Any members of the Chemical Society who were not present and who desire to go on the trip should see Miller in the Union any afternoon between 1:00 and 2:00 o'clock.
