HOCKEY SEASON REVIEW

Lack Of Practice Puts Team At Disadvantage

The Technology Hockey Team completed a not too successful season with the 7-0 defeat by Boston on Washington's Birthday. The team won one and tied six games. The poor showing was due mainly to lack of proper practice, owing to the unwillingness of the Arena management to furnish suitable practice hours.

At the end of the season Clarence Cochran, ’11, of Melrose, was re-elected captain of the team. Kenyon Reberger, of Richmond, Ohio, will be manager next year.

An early cold spell made it possible to play a game with the Winchendon Hockey Club at Winchendon on Dec. 11, which resulted in a win for us.

Dartmouth was the next opponent. Before the series began in early February the team had only two practices. The first game was played under the roof of the Arena, and no one could tell who the stronger team was. The second game was played on the ice at Hanover. The final score was Dartmouth 6, Technology 0.

New Year's Eve, Technology won a well deserved victory over the Amherst Aggies at the Arena. In the first game the team showed wonderful improvement over their game with Dartmouth and the defense, composed of Connel Cochran, Swain, and Johnson, successfully met every attack made by the strong Amherst forwards. Score: Technology 1, Amherst Aggies 0.

The first out of town game was played when the team went to Hanover January 4. Dartmouth expected an easy game because of their defensive victory earlier in the season but found Technology a much stronger team than on their former meeting last winter. They were forced to the limit to win by the score of 2 to 0.

At this time the team was in the best condition of the whole season as is evidenced by the showing made against Cornell on Jan. 12 at the Arena. The evening before, Harvard had scored in the only matter to defeat Cornell 2-0 and Cornell was very low in the face of Technology. Cornell scored both its goals in the first half. In the second half Technology came to life and the play was around the Cornell goal practically the whole half. Only very remarkable work upon the part of Cornell's goal prevented the score from being increased. In the second half Technology came to life and the play was evenly matched for the remainder of the game. The final score was Technology 1, Cornell 1.

The mid-year trial did not materially improve over the game with Dartmouth. The team showed wonderful improvement over their game with Dartmouth and the defense, composed of Connel Cochran, Swain, and Johnson, successfully met every attack made by the strong Amherst forwards. Score: Technology 1, Amherst Aggies 0.
