The Lounger feels bound to admit that no such array of sheer womanly beauty as struck his eye on that night ever brightened any Military Science lecture of his remembrance. While waiting an early spectator for the rise of them stage after stage, he must, however, register his acknowledgment to the unknown and probably fugitive author of the songs which they expose one of his meditative moments to rest. He is even less to be broken. It will, therefore, almost without adverse remark or censure, that his

"BACK TO ROGERS"

THE Institute Committee production was another instance of the efficiency and the universal interest in our undergraduate life. "Back to Rogers" was a pleasant diversion which, judging from the favorable attitude of the audience that filled Huntington Hall, would be well received the more if it were given oftener. The skits were well presented.

The Lounger is usually averse to attending noted gatherings; he forces the public to accept his influence to which they expose one of his meditative moments to rest.

THE "LATE" CLUB

"So Long," says your friend, "I'll meet you at six." Whereupon your mind goes through a process somewhat as follows:

He said six, he therefore means six, for he will be late. Still, he might be later. I'll fool him and get there at six-dif ferent.

But even then you are wrong, for he outguesses you and doesn't appear until sixty.

Of course, it doesn't matter that you have wasted twenty minutes that could have been advantageously invested in the University— the training ground for future life to be sure—and in the University parenthetically is the exception that proves the rule.

If you don't believe this, see how many get an eye on eight o'clock by eight o'clock.

It is a bit incongruous though when you realize we are subconsciously forming our habits now for the time when we are out in "the wide, wide world." None of us expects to continue tardiness when he enters business. Why support the "late" habit?

It's just as easy to have the "prompt" habit. It's just as easy to be in earnest when you say, "I'll be there at six." And it's a lot more efficient. —The Michigan Daily.

The above clipping is so particularly applicable to many of the irresponsibilities of the young people of the class that it should be noted by those who perpetuate the wrong, while those who suffer should give the text of the article where it would do some good.

THE FRESHMAN GLEE

FRESHMEN who have taken steps to run a Freshman Glee on the campus this year in the ever-overreaching of the Freshman class may be relieved in some measure, are discovering that 1910 has the right kind of metre. Now that arrangements have been completed it is necessary that the right of the fellows that it should be given to the enterprise, since the expense of an outside dance is large and not easily assimilated unless it be divided among a large number of men.
