NOTWITHSTANDING the somewhat unconventional method chosen to express patriotism, the recent burning in effigy of the German ambassador in Russia is hardly to be char-acterized as an outburst of disorderly spirit. Throughout the celebration there was evidence of a restraint which preserved order—pre-sewed, at least, as much as was necessary for an affair in which almost everyone within bearing was a more or less active participant.

The completeness with which the Dormitory students are given charge of their conduct may be expected to result now and then in doings out of the ordinary, which under a severer discipline would come in for censure. Student government here will not stand or fall by the actions of a few cases of venturing "out of bounds," as its establishment already prescribes. The salute by civilians must seemingly be left to the American army. If it is even possible, should more of a degree be shown by a representative of a foreign power, yet hindrens of them who called for a new solution to the "flagrowing," as they call it, above all, take no measures before consultation with those who
