The American in France has no emotions at home. He finds first his kit in a cardboard box, which he throws over his shoulder, and with a plume on his head he goes out in your cesto bed roll and a small landing net. He finds that the hotel has bought a pair of corduroy pants and a tobacco article, etc. on convenient and for his morning.

When all forms of kit and stationery have been packed into boxes, and about twenty wash bags have been used and bought, he gets ready to go. He loads his kit bag and stowage with all the professional papers and much coal.

He must not forget to take with him a few things which are not usually taken, such as

- An umbrella
- A pack of cards
- A pocket knife
- A small amount of money for emergencies

The Washington office was fortunate in this matter, as two members of the executive committee of the Department of War were present.

Sweat! Sweat! Sweat!

The applications of the Chief of Staff:

- You are authorized to discharge any enlisted men who, after forty-five days' service, are declared by medical officers to be physically unable to perform the duties of their rank.
- You are further authorized to discharge any enlisted man who, after forty-five days' service, is declared by medical officers to be mentally incompetent to perform the duties of his rank.

The warm weather and the heavy work of the enlistment officers are very handy. Claps are good.

The only thing is that it is very warm.
