Soviet Daniels Issues Stirring Message to all College Men

Annapolis Cannot Meet Demand for Officers—Need Greater Than For Ships and Guns

A stirring message to college students concerned with the war effort is given by Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt in a circular letter to college men which has been distributed among the able-bodied men who expect to enter the service. The letter is addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, and is dated from the Naval Academy at Annapolis cannot supply the young men of American colleges who have been asked to make their needs during this crisis. He said in his

It is vital to a powerful navy to have experienced, skillful officers who are not only experienced officers of the United States, but also officers who have been trained in the schools of the world. It is the duty of every college to do its utmost to assist the Navy in this work, and to the Navy in the war effort.

It is the duty of every college to do its utmost to assist the Navy in this work, and to the Navy in the war effort.

A new system to solve problems of the Navy

Secretary Daniels issues a stirring message to all college men.

Navy cannot meet demand for officers—need greater than for ships and guns.

Secretary Daniels issues a stirring message to all college men.

Navy cannot meet demand for officers—need greater than for ships and guns.

Secretary Daniels issues a stirring message to all college men.

Navy cannot meet demand for officers—need greater than for ships and guns.