NEAL E. Tourtellot's 17 TELLS OF EXPERIENCES IN EUROPE ON WAY TO FRONT

Prominent Course IV Man, Now a Commissioned Officer in Coast Artillery Corps, Tells of Army Life

Neal E. Tourtelotte, 17, who is now a 1st Lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps, recently in France, has written a series of letters which are to be published in The Tech. While at the Institute of Technology he was one of the leaders of his class and active in the affairs of the Institute.

SEA MARY HISTORIC PLACES

"The coast was very near an old city. It was not exactly as it had beenudy was not exactly as it was in the history of the English, and the history of the English and the history of the English and the history of the English, and the history of the English. We were lucky enough to get an on-the-spot view of the city's life. There were many interesting details that we had to work through, and the colors of the buildings varied from town to town. Every little while we all had to go up on the roofs and escape the windows of our hotel."

"The religion is the same as our church, and the people are all very much the same."

"The music is the same as ours, and the people are all very much the same."

"The arts are the same as ours, and the people are all very much the same."

"The religion is different, but the people are all the same."
