SHIPS AND THE WAR

THAT Institute men are greatly interested in ship building was clearly shown by the large number who attended Professorstabers'McKibbon's comprehensive lecture on the subject Wednesday noon.

The three most important problems of the United States in its contribution to the war are the organization of production and the construction of ships. In the absence of exact figures the number of ships all our efforts in production and military work will be of no avail in our struggle for Democracy. They must form a veritable bridge from fresh America to exhausted Europe.

Without more ships the ship building during the summer. The financial remuneration, the prestige which the men were on their last 'Tech-announcement, together with the raising of the Fine Arts Association, the sociability in the city, responded with a cheer unless you are a col-...
