The Signal Corps Leads in Training Men

Opportunity to Perfect Themselves in Radio Work Given to Draft Men.

The War Department authorizes the establishment of twelve Signal Corps schools in various parts of the American Army. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.

The Signal Corps has a mission of utmost importance, for the transmission of radio messages is of vital importance in the conduct of military operations. The Signal Corps has established twelve schools to train men in the science of radio communication. Each of these schools offers an opportunity to men who have had no previous training in radio work to become proficient in the science of radio communication.