LIBRARY WAR SERVICE NEEDS MANY BOOKS FOR OUR BOYS

Professor Robert F. Bigelow, Librarian of the Library, reported the following, June 6, 1918, to the Central District of the Library War Service, appointed by a memorial address made by the Hon. Robert R. Bacon, U. S. Senator from Vermont, with a request for assistance in the collection of books for second-hand book dealers in order to sell them as quickly as possible, if their value is determined by the British Consul at London.

"We appeal to you, because we believe that you are able to see the need of many of these books. Only a few thousand pounds of books for second-hand book dealers can be delivered at the present time, because of the amount of work that has been done, but if these books could be sold for less than their value, the result would be a very great benefit. We have in mind the following book dealers: George Roper, Jr., of the British Consul at New York; Howard, of the Consul at Chicago, Illinois; and Mr. Humphreys, of Paris.

"May we be permitted to explain that we are not asking for any special favor, but simply for the books that are in your possession. We would be willing to pay a very small price for each book that you could spare. The books that we are asking for are of great value, and we would be willing to pay a very small price for each book that you could spare.

Your truly,

R. F. Bigelow, Librarian."
