men who could by extending the period of their college training multiply fourfold the number of engineers, architects, and mechanics who could be produced.

However, the need arose for the training of young men in the engineering and mechanical arts, and it will be the purpose of the Government to continue their training until their draft age is reached.

For this purpose the development of new courses of study has been necessary. In addition to the usual curriculum of science, the students will be given practical experience in the various departments of engineering and mechanics.

At the end of the training period, they will be sent to the various departments of the Government where they will be employed in positions of responsibility.

In this way, the Government hopes to produce a large number of engineers and mechanics who will be able to carry on the work of reconstruction and development.
