SOME VIEWS OF LABOR

It is not always easy to get many views. The New York Sun recently used a representative in connection with reports on labor conditions in some of the important manufacturing and executive offices. He selected an illuminating report, and among other things he mentioned a conversation he had with the owner of a large manufacturing concern of the machine union. "Can you tell me," said Mr. Lavitt, "what is the average number of men employed in the machine and the hourly rate of wages paid?" The manufacturer said: "There was an average of 500 men employed and an hourly rate of $2.50 per hour." Mr. Lavitt then asked: "Have you any idea of the amount of wages paid in the machine division?" The manufacturer answered: "I am not entirely sure, but I think the total amount is $2,500 per week." Mr. Lavitt then asked: "Is this amount paid in cash or in checks?" The manufacturer answered: "The total amount is paid in cash."

"We have a program that would prevent this condition. If the manufacturer would pay and if necessary reduce the wages, the employees would be able to keep working at the same wage. The employer would be able to keep working at the same wage. The employer would be able to keep working at the same wage."

Mr. Lavitt's answer, of course, was understood by the employees to mean that nobody was happy. The strike of the employees was probably not very large, but the managers and workers were not satisfied. They stated that they had been working at a smaller rate of wages. The company, it was said, was not willing to pay the increased wages. The employees' demands were ignored, and the strike continued. The employees were not satisfied with the conditions and were willing to continue the strike. This is what happened.

In this case, the employees did not want to accept the conditions. The employer did not want to pay the increased wages. The employees were not satisfied with the conditions and were willing to continue the strike.

The conditions in this case were a result of the employees' desire to have better wages and working conditions.

CANADA'S RELATIONS

The following article on the international relations of Canada recently appeared in the Engineering and Mining Journal.

Canada is economically dependent on a certain territory. We have long been accustomed to commercial independence and, as the result of new discoveries, to the development of our own resources. We are dependent on external markets, and the dramatic effect has been the increased cost of living, which carries with it a certain cost to the manufacturers. It is said that the manufacturers are suffering more from the increased cost of living than from any other cause.

The conditions in Canada are such that the manufacturers are not experiencing the increased cost of living to the same extent as in the United States. The manufacturers in Canada are more able to meet the increased cost of living than are the manufacturers in the United States. The increased cost of living has not been as great a factor in Canada as it has been in the United States.
