THE ALL TECHNOLOGY PICNIC

NE of the things that made summer school last year a little more bearable was the All-Technology Picnic. It was a sort of summer All-Technology Smoker. There was about as much tobacco consumed. The same may have had its effect on the selection of the speakers. There were no speeches. It was something in which every Technology man had a chance to express himself, without any jealousy of the 'professional' of the latest years. It was the only time that I ever had an illustration of the proposition that if you use the same technique as in your classroom, you are doing something wrong.

There were a number of speakers, including:

- J. L. Pierson,
- A. F. Putnam,
- L. E. Hood,
- H. H. Bolton,
- M. M. Collins,
- L. F. H. Brown,
- T. D. Davis.

The last speaker was a resident physician for the Mass. Institute of Technology. He was perhaps best known as the architect of the new building of the State School for Boys at Brookline, on the Charles River. He has been an architect for many years, and is probably the only one in the country who has been in the same line for over thirty years. He is perhaps the only one in the country who has been in the same line for over thirty years.

The city is always receptive to the claims of the city, and probably the only one in the country who has been in the same line for over thirty years. He is perhaps the only one in the country who has been in the same line for over thirty years.

The bride is always receptive to the claims of the city, and probably the only one in the country who has been in the same line for over thirty years. He is perhaps the only one in the country who has been in the same line for over thirty years.
