CAMP Technology, the Institute’s summer survey camp on the west coast of Flamen, near East Machias, opened its 1920 season last Wednesday with ninety-six students in attendance, the largest number in the history of the camp. The main party of campers left Boston on the night of Monday, August 15, and arrived in camp shortly before noon of the following day. Augmented in numbers by some who had preceded the regular campers by bus, another train, or automobile, these spread themselves over the camp, which was absent but year only because he was serving in the army where he held a position of importance.
