IT SEEMS LIKE AN OMISSION

The remark was recently made from a Boston pulpit that "the principal reason for the social position of a man is in the fact that we know so little about how to live together." It is also true that very little is being done to educate the people to their social obligations, and it is a deplorable fact that the Institute is doing nothing to give its graduates an understanding of their duties.

We are naturally short sighted and our dependence upon the rest of the human species for the fulfillment of our obligations to them. We still live to ourselves and consider what we do to the world as an after thought.

If the groceries are good and the prices reasonable, we don't care if they were raised by foreigners whose low standards of living are compelling their good American free-grocers to give them a chance to trade with them.

It is also true that very little is being done to educate the people to their social obligations, and it is a deplorable fact that the Institute is doing nothing to give its graduates an understanding of their duties.

We are naturally short sighted and our dependence upon the rest of the human species for the fulfillment of our obligations to them. We still live to ourselves and consider what we do to the world as an after thought.