The American Machinist is justly known as the organ of the shop floor. It is in a required reading for every machinist from the hour he enters the industry until he retires from it. It is in a cornered market. The principal machinists, for the most part, pay for the American Machinist from their own pockets, and the company pay only a small amount more than that to the American Machinist. The following memorandum is copied from the front page of the American Machinist for the week ending April 27, 1917.
