THE TECH
FRIDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1920

PENN RULES THAT GRADS CAN COMPETE ON ATHLETIC TEAMS

Philadelphia, Oct. 5—The athletic council of the University of Pennsylvania has adopted a "no-rule" policy as to the eligibility of players transferred from other universities and has presented to the university in athletic competition.

The athletic council has decided to adopt what is known as the "no-rule" policy, which means that any student who has played for another institution has the "degree" granted the degree of the student's last school. In no other case can athletic eligibility be changed.

Key players may be transferred from one institution to another, but only the degree granted by the new school will be recognized as the degree of the player's last school.

The athletic council has also decided to adopt a "no-rule" policy as to the eligibility of players transferred from other universities.

The athletic council has decided to adopt what is known as the "no-rule" policy, which means that any student who has played for another institution will be considered as having the degree granted by the new school. In no other case can athletic eligibility be changed.

Key players may be transferred from one institution to another, but only the degree granted by the new school will be recognized as the degree of the player's last school. The athletic council has also decided to adopt a "no-rule" policy as to the eligibility of players transferred from other universities.

The athletic council has decided to adopt what is known as the "no-rule" policy, which means that any student who has played for another institution will be considered as having the degree granted by the new school. In no other case can athletic eligibility be changed.