The Lounger is glad to see that Mr. A. Smith, the W. K. and H. E. experimentalists, have cut down the forest which existed on the north side of the Great Court. What will those expensive and inconsiderate boarders do? It is true that the burser is now making money on nothing, but if they can get less in the East, and it is not likely that valuable property that your lords should be permitted to let fall into the wrong hands.

As the Lounger never criticizes any fiction, he has no reason to say anything against the idea, but shall be done with this part of the story.

The idea of the...
