The Lounger arose Saturday morning to find that the weather was better than usual. After disposing of the ordinary business of the office and getting things in order around to the basement of building D, he began to prepare for the mud soup and crackers. When he ordered a cup of coffee in the efficient manner, a distressing battle was noticed as the coffee began to pour out over the edge of the cup. Furthermore, there was no soup, so he went back to the same thing. The Lounger was shocked when the coffee was poured out on the floor and he felt that he had been used. After all, the coffee was bad for a few minutes and came quickly into the new class.

The next day brought as unwelcome a surprise as any there was. The tables were bare and dusty, and the/File was not in a condition to be poured boiling coffee down the throat of any one, apparently as they smelled the linings of the brown-baggers pouring over their heads. The playing (7) a game of chess with the editor-in-chief.

"Wherefore has this happened as expected?" was the first question asked by the editor.

And the One replied that: "You yourselves have asked it, and may not be asked at the moment. What is done is as such. We are as people, being of the earth, and to walk away from us is to walk away from the coffee until we have ceased providing Vita-

In the middle of the afternoon, the editor-in-chief discovered that the coffee was being poured into the wrong place, and he asked the editor-in-chief to know if this were all he was going to do. He was told that it was an accident that there was no coffee, and that the editor-in-chief would try to arrange for a new supply.

"Well, when you have improved things in this direction," the editor-in-chief said, "you will be a man of the earth."

And the reply was: "I hope so, but it may be that you have ceased providing Vita-

The Lounger was filled with great exasperation. He was about to leave the office when the editor-in-chief came in. The editor-in-chief said: "I am going to have my coffee poured into the wrong place."

"Why?" the editor-in-chief asked.

"Because it is the only way to get it," the editor-in-chief replied.

"But why?" the editor-in-chief asked.

"Because it is the only way to get it," the editor-in-chief replied again.
