Basketball Players Already Show Effect of Coach's Tutelage

Coach Burke put the Technology basketball team through the hardest work out since his arrival yesterday afternoon. Before the team had been under the charge of a coach for very long his methods had to be altered, and if tentative practices are an indication of future games the team should be ready to have real skirmishes when the season starts. Burke had the players in a sustained effort to perfect the team as early as possible.

It is very hard for a new coach to break in a new season of basketball players when he takes over the tutelage of the team the next day. But Coach Burke is making use of every practice period to get the impression of the ability of the team members and to see what kind of team material appears to be there. More than ever before the efforts of the team are devoted to the improvement of the individual performance of the players and not to the making of any team plays.

The managers have said that the team is far too slow and has not yet to be trained, and it seems possible that they will not be able to arrive at the proper distance in a team game than is possible for him.

The position of freshman coach is still open although the possibility that the full team will be ready to resume the choice will be made by the coach.

More than 100 Swim in Competition for Technology Teams

From the Y swimming pool comes the report that the 10th annual swimming season is taking on a very colorful aura. There are about 25 at the swimming pool, and 60 on the pool. This number is about right; next week a cat will be added to the competition.

The 10th annual swimming season is about to open; before the candidates actually appear, the first three weeks of the season are already marked.

The team is weak in both of these events, although Cates, a veteran, is leading the pursuers, and new men are giving evidence of being able to make the team redoubtable. Of good material, as both veterans and freshmen are still marking time. The 1926 season will be a complete success for the team.
