PUBLIC HEALTH AND WORLD NEEDS ARE DISCUSSED

Lack of Success in Abating Degenerative Diseases Is Big Problem

At the second general meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, held in room 2036 last night, Dr. Livingstone Farrand, President of Cornell University, reviewed the progress made by health in this country since 1850, as he has shown in the recent publication and in his annual address. In particular he said that the amount of time, mortality, illnesses, and disability caused by every disease to which man is susceptible is increasing. The public health officers and organizations which have been unable to prevent a decrease in the degenerative diseases, have not at present re-established any similar condition. Dr. Farrand also cited the importance of human vitality as a fundamental factor in the process. The understanding of vitality in Europe as a result of the war and particularly of the child population has been a strong drive in the field of public health. The problem of public health is no longer possible to control by the methods and the end results rather than by the problem of public health officers.
