The enthusiastic who advance the plan of rebuilding Waller are like most reformers, so thoroughly convinced of the merit of their project that they are highly intolerant of even minimal criticisms. That their idea is fundamentally sound no one will deny. That it will be put into execution in the time is also improbable. Therefore their supporters justify their attempt to accomplish it through

One important factor has been overlooked; the time element. The corporation at present has its attention fixed on the primary want of materials involving great expenditures. A considerable sum has been spent during the year on undergraduate athletes. In the present time a proportionate time to push this new scheme?

If the need were urgent, or if delay would inconvenience many students in the future, or if the matter was of the utmost urgency, the case would be different. It is true that activities are expendable but the loss of the best possible use is not made of the space now available. The student body has been exposed to activities that fall short of the mark in the offices, but the majority of these appear only two or three hours per week. Needless to say, there seems to be no danger to the walls of Waller in the immediate future.

The sum required for new dormitories, the $80,000 for needed repairs is big. But it is, nevertheless, no slight addition upon the corporation and the extent to which such expenditures will not be very extensive is a problem. The suggestion is certainly enticing but since it is conceived by activity men for activity men it would be well to accept an outside viewpoint before going along with so much assurance.

INFINITE AND ETERNAL

We tire of giving money. First one fund and then another to be raised. Always someone needing help. Always answering one for this and another for that. And then the temptation to burn forth into vituperation, to damn the facts and "let the dead die" always seem to intervene. That this is no fault anyone's.

It is said that somewhere in the world suffering must always exist. But does that give someone license to consign so many people to go their way unaided because others have profited by our sympathies? Despite all we have done, all we have given, the need for "student friendly" is too great to pass unheeded. Answer the call of brotherhood just once more.

INTERCOLLEGATES

The last second-week meeting of Kansas City University, Mayor Mayer afforded the students an opportunity to meet the cabinet of the professional, to discuss the latest political developments, to improve their political and cultural standing position with well-known political figures, and to hear the personal reminiscences of one of the country's most famous statesmen. Mayer, who delivered an address to the student body, said that the time is ripe for political action and that it is the duty of the young men to become politically active.

The meeting was well attended and the students were enthusiastic in their response to Mayer's call for political action. The students expressed their appreciation of Mayer's efforts and his dedication to the cause of political reform.

Exception Taken from Final

As a result of a petition by the senior class of Kansas City University, Mayer was granted a release from his term of office. Mayer, who had been serving as mayor for the past two years, was pleased with the decision and thanked his constituents for their support.

The senior class recently met with Mayer to discuss the possibility of running a candidate of their own in the upcoming election. Mayer was enthusiastic about the idea and offered his support to the group.

Seance Frolic for Hard Labor

Distinguished students at the State University were delighted with the last lecture by Mr. Kennedy. Mr. Kennedy is a well-known lecturer on the subject of seances and has given many lectures on the subject.

The seance was held in the university library and was attended by many students. Mr. Kennedy gave a lecture on the nature of seances and the phenomena associated with them. He also gave a demonstration of a seance and showed how it can be performed.

The students were impressed with Mr. Kennedy's knowledge and the demonstration. They were also interested in the possibility of conducting their own seances.
