The dormitory rules for freshmen

SUBJECTING the freshman in the dormitories to a set of rules drawn up explicitly for them to obey is an innovation at Tech which produced mixed results this past spring. The loyalty of the Tech chorus is still intact, but there has been a distinct desire to complain about some of the rules.

There has been nothing petty about the chorus, and consequently nothing petty has been put on the list. There is no threat of infringing on the personal freedom of the student, but there is the threat of enforcing the rules more rigidly. The chorus leaders have taken up the position that they do not have sufficient influence to enforce so many rules as are required. It is true, of course, that Technology is unlike other colleges in this respect, but the members of the chorus may be repudiated by the student body. The last senior chorus is likely to be their last.

The chorus leaders wonder whether those freshmen from "T. E. and S." who feel the impact of their precise time requirements and regimentation in athletics or life or only the gossips, with a single, unsteady thought in their heads, against. The Lounger can blink of their advantage. The chorus leaders wonder whether those freshmen from "T. E. and S." who feel the impact of their precise time requirements and regimentation in athletics or life or only the gossips, with a single, unsteady thought in their heads, against. The Lounger can blink of their advantage.

The chorus leaders wonder whether those freshmen from "T. E. and S." who feel the impact of their precise time requirements and regimentation in athletics or life or only the gossips, with a single, unsteady thought in their heads, against. The Lounger can blink of their advantage.