The Tech

Monday, January 7, 1924

Athletes Long Lived at the "Harvard Crimson"

Mr. W. H. Gray, Director of Physical Education at the University, has prepared an interesting article from his trip to Dublin. It contains a description of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company's cooperative with "assistant" graduates of the College. The Editor has a number of interesting facts to report on the longevity of Harvard graduates. The figures for the average young man are not as good as those for the average aged man, but there is a marked improvement if the figures for the average young man are compared with those for the average aged man. Mr. Gray's figures give the normal longevity of the Harvard affiliate and their participation in the various activities of the University. It is not an obligation, but it is a responsibility. All Harvard graduates have an obligation to make a pure guess. The Editor has a number of interesting facts to report on the longevity of Harvard graduates. The figures for the average young man are not as good as those for the average aged man, but there is a marked improvement if the figures for the average young man are compared with those for the average aged man.

Unique

Uniquely so in one respect. The only restaurant in Boston where you may indulge in tea and cards every afternoon. Best of food.

The Colonial Room

TREMONT STREET AT WINTER