A LOSS TO TECHNOLOGY

A CAX the flag of the Institute is flown at half-mast, and our very surroundings seem pervaded with that atmosphere of melancholy and silent grief which comes with the departure of one of our number from our port. The more are our feelings accentuated when that one was loved and respected by all of us and was widely renowned for his contributions to the cause of science and his accomplishments in the name of T.

The death of Professor Joseph J. Longe came to us as an unexpected surprise, one of those un预备 facts which are always known to us with impressive forcefulness, realities which we cannot at first appreciate and the truth of which must surely be accepted with reluctant surrender. The Institute has suffered a great loss.

As an organ representative of student opinion, not only did we lose a respected member of our organization, but a sincere sympathizer of those who remain behind him. His name will be connected with that of Technology and his efforts in his behalf will long be cherished with enduring memory.

REGARDING POLITICAL CLUBS

A SHORT time ago THE TECH published a communication from the Student Council which discussed suitable elections for the new political clubs would have on students who might be so unwise as to become members. The author saw "reasoning speech, campaign, petty churl, well bred men, and all the political glamourizing of the moment", which would leave us as ignorant of politics and issues as we were before the elections.

As a matter of fact any agency which could by any chance provoke such a rising tide of emotion might easily be condemned for it could not have been for any reason and fact that too many students are insecurely in their attitude toward public affairs and are most happy when they are placed in the role of the disinterested listener. It thus seems to us that we are in no immediate danger of an overdose of political pamphlets and pre-election altruism.

Just why a person who wishes to make "an honest attempt to understand political issues" should be barred from his efforts, due to the presence of two clubs which are preparing to hold every meeting, is difficult to see. One can remain impartial for a certain period, but to go beyond that limit is to be inefficient. Surely impartiality is below the dignity of publics and on that principle the justification for an ultimate choice is based.

The letter arrived in the Laboratory, each and has the effect of pleasingly aware how much better it is to be with your personal friends.

The Laboratory.

The thought of thickly appearing so personally to you that I can perhaps make you feel better to be the author of this group through THE TECH supplying stimulus to the continuing electrical work of your classes in the Institute. We have been studying the effects of your graphs of the literature to put them down on of some of the course that you may do.

Very truly yours,

Wide, AWARE.

The Laboratory.

A very boyish letter, but one which has been written in a rather nonchalant effort on your part. I cannot understand the students and I would hope to hear from your last letter. I cannot understand the students and I would hope to hear from your last letter. I cannot understand the students and I would hope to hear from your last letter. I cannot understand the students and I would hope to hear from your last letter.

MYSTERY ENSHROUDS NEW VOO DOO COVER

Artistic, Technology Professor, Refuge Late Bot Be Used

Members of the Voo Doo staff re-quested to investigate the mystery of the designer of the feature cover is rather an enigma. The cover, which is a drawing of a sitting woman named Voo Doo religious ritual on the South Sea Islands, was created by an unknown artist whose identity remains unknown. Voo Doo is a ritual that is practiced by some tribes on the South Sea Islands. The designer of the cover was not found, and the Institute is still searching for his identity.

In order to solve the mystery, the Institute staff is working on the possibility of commissioning an artist to create a new cover that will reflect the spiritual and cultural significance of the Voo Doo ritual. The Institute is also considering the idea of creating a special edition of the magazine that will feature a detailed article on the history and traditions of the Voo Doo ritual.

The United States Should Participate in the League. The United States is the League's most powerful member, and its participation is essential to the League's success. The United States has the resources and influence to help ensure the League's effectiveness in dealing with international disputes and to promote peace and stability in the world.

The United Nations Should Maintain the Mandate. In maintaining its efforts with those of other states in the preservation of peace, the United States should be prepared to commit additional resources to the League if necessary. The United States should work closely with the League, and with other states, to ensure the success of the League's efforts.

The United States Should Accept No Obligations Under the League

The United States Government will accept no obligations under the League, and will not participate in any activities of the League that are not consistent with the United States' national interest or the maintenance of peace and security.
