SUNDAY AFTERNOON DRAWING

THERE is a very evident consensus of opinion among the students and faculty, as one might expect, that their four years of undergraduate life should be dedicated to having one rip-roaring and con tinuing experience. The maximum model of the maximum called thrills out of this period of their lives. Their axiom seems to be, "The more the merrier," and I like the Cob and the Colonial. And as a matter of fact, if we are to take the word of those who have preceded us, now is the time for us to have our. For the outside and interior world, the world of business and cold indifference, the world in which the ordinary individual is but a lost ear in the sands of communism, is a shock to the individual. We shall have enough troubles then we are told, and what little joy we have to get out of life we had better get now.

And yet those fleeting moments of pleasure are not without their effects upon us. The virtue of the "High Life" collects its toll from both the physical and the mental sides of our operations. Thrills, too, become fewer and farther between. The law of diminishing returns starts to operate on us, and we get to feel as if our friends have stopped coming to see us, as if we too are being forgotten. We can get our good times at college without incurring only gloom but a feeling of contentment. A little economy in unimportant things will make a noticeable difference in our periods of recreation, when we can lead a more worry and assume a role of carelessness, will solve the problem.

WHO SAYS?

The following questions recently came to the notice of the student body of familiar sayings:
1. "Don't you think a blindfold is silly?"
2. "When you're in love, your idea of a good time changes, doesn't it?"
3. "What are you going to do with the money you have now?"

Scott's Correct Evening Dress

By no other item of wear is a man judged so definitely as to his evening clothes. So nothing is quite as deserving of consideration for the discretion as a Scott's evening suit or Tuxedo tailored with all the care and artful craftsmanship of Scott's skilled tailors. For Scott's correct cut offers security in style. Scott's custom-tailored tailoring as a perfect fit, Scott's striking fabrics from the last and foreign looms give promise of bliss, pleasant wear. There's value in every one of our evening suits—value that only a Scott production cut and tailored in our own work-rooms can give.
