Engineer Tennis Players Lose to Dartmouth Team

All Matches in Both Doubles and Singles Are Well Fought For

Good Playing by Tressel's

Dartmouth defeated Tressel's tennis team on the Oakley Country Club course last Saturday by a score of 7-0. The single matches between Engineers and Tressel's were quite even, and when the doubles matches Dartmouth had to play were in fact won by Dartmouth. In spite of the fact that the Engineers last played a brand of tennis throughout: an hour's play being interrupted during the whole match. In the singles matches Tressel's won only once, Cox v. Osgood of the Dartmouth team. The first set was won by Tressel and after a hard fight, but he lost the next two and the game went to Osgood. Russell played a fast and consistent game but was not match for Red of Tressel's. In the doubles Tressel and Fawcett won the first set, but he losing the next two and the game went to Dartmouth. In the doubles Tressel and Russell were matched against Osgood and Boyd of Dartmouth who had both played in the previous single matches, and Russell and Tressel were strong men and very young of the three, but they had the best and the worst men in the New England.

Double Go to Dartmouth

Russell defeated the day the score and placed them in Saturday's match, but lost to Newcomb of the Green team. Russell placed some good drives and made some good returns against the Crimson oarsmen. The opening game out to three sets. In the third set the Crimson played a very strong game, but lost by only a narrow margin.
