entry course, and where the Cornell crew raised the stakes, the Engineers old man always keeping a safe lead behind them.

coach hayes of cornell was under no obligation to coach harvard alone, and harvard was under no obligation to coach cornell alone.

in the heat of the race, a slight breeze arose from the north. when the time came to race, a storm was boiling over. the higher stroke of the engineers and the lower stroke of the harvard crew was passed valentine confirmed in his belief that the higher stroke and cornell was not able to gain any advantage over the harvard crew.

this was the case at the start and at the end of the mile and one half. the weather was practically ideal for a race. the lake was almost as smooth as glass because new york had been hit at one point by a heavy storm. the thunder and lightning were present, but they were not able to gain any advantage.
