CONFlicTING STUDENT CONTROL

The action of the Executive Committee of the Institute Control Committee in handling a decision as to what group of players should use the baseball diamonds on a certain day is unfortunate, because of the actual incidents of the case, but because of the operation regarding the division of student government control which it involved.

After the practice hours on the diamonds were assigned to the various groups of ball players by the I.C.C., the papers of the groups of players involved were recorded among the arrangement of the hours. This fact was not presented to the I.C.C., and the practice was voted upon and thereby the matter was intentionally closed. But the protest was carried to the Executive Committee of the I.C.C., and a decision was asked. The Executive Committee passed favorably on the protest.

In the action of the Executive Committee in overturning the decision of the I.C.C. on a matter pertaining strictly to athletics that is unfortunate. Under the student government at Tech, it is possible to consider its own affairs in matters that come under the scope of that particular organization. But if the Executive Committee in its decision is based on the course of the work of any activity, the power of that activity to prevent the decision of the Advisory Council of the Institute Committee is sadly impaired.

If in the future, matters come up pertaining strictly to the work of one activity, and about which there may be any question as to a division of authority, it seems that the logical thing to do is to refer it through the officers of the activity to the Advisory Council of that organization before any decision is made by the Institute Committee.

DO NOT NEGLECT OUR VISITORS

Open House night was characterized by a lack of guides and by the eagerness with which the throng followed the all too meager recreation at hand. We can remember when as freshmen, we were torn between a desire to laugh at the puns of our older friends and a desire not to have ourselves thought so self-conscious and so unsuited to the building in which we found ourselves. We have since learned to laugh at our own foibles. To the new students at Tech who are in the throngs, we say: Don't neglect our visitors.

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AND EVERY NIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia, Conductor

The Hygrad Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Agide Jacchia, in the Symphony Hall of the Institute of Technology, will present Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, a program of symphonic music. One of the features of the concerts is the fact that the Symphony Orchestra consists of a body of students in the Institute of Technology. They are the finest and the ablest of the students, and their performances are always a delight to the audience.

The orchestra consists of 80 members, and the program for each concert includes a variety of music. It usually includes a symphony by a well-known composer, a popular piece, and a solo by a famous artist. The soloists are usually members of the orchestra, and they give a fine performance. The program is always well-balanced, and the orchestra gives a fine performance in each concert.

The orchestra is conducted by Agide Jacchia, a talented musician who has been associated with the orchestra for many years. He is a skilled conductor, and his leadership is always evident in the performances of the orchestra.

The concerts are held in the Symphony Hall, which is located on the campus of the Institute of Technology. The hall is large and well-appointed, and it provides an excellent setting for the performances of the orchestra.

The tickets for the concerts are available at the Institute Box Office, and they are sold at a moderate price. The concerts are highly recommended, and they are a source of great pride for the students of the Institute of Technology.
