SEVERAL weeks ago the Institute Committee voted down a proposal to institute baseball as an official extramural sport. This decision was made because it allows the election of a candidate without the majority of the votes cast. In the past, the slate ballot, combined with a large number of candidates, has allowed the election of a man with less than a majority of the votes cast. Any one of his opponents could reasonably claim that he was defeated. It was thought that the majority system would mean a thoroughgoing choice for the popular candidate.

This difficulty the primary ballot does away with. Under it no man could be elected unless he had the majority of the votes. It also gives the student body a clear-cut choice. The majority system has been advocated for some time because of the success of the National League in its use. Another advantage of the majority system is that it is not complicated. It might be hard for the average student to digest without some effort on his part, but it has the virtue of requiring a decision.

At the meeting of the Institute Committee tomorrow night it is to be hoped that the question of elections will come up again. Most assuredly a new system that will act more fairly is needed. The present one is out of date. It allows the clique to elect the student body. It gives power to an organized few. This is not the purpose of elections. They should rather aim to put into official office that man that is most desired by the majority.

TECHNOLOGY may, in the near future, be represented by a new electorial system. The Technology may, in the near future, be represented by a new electorial system. The new system is one requiring a primary ballot. The reason given was that the student body could not be reformed according to the rules of the polls.

Since then there has been much discussion on our electoral system. In the main it has been found inadequate. It allows the election of a candidate without the majority of those voting. In the past, the slate ballot, combined with a large number of candidates, has allowed the election of a man with less than a majority of the votes cast. Any one of his opponents could reasonably claim that he was defeated. It was thought that the majority system would mean a thoroughgoing choice for the popular candidate.

This difficulty the primary ballot does away with. Under it no man could be elected unless he had the majority of the votes. It also gives the student body a clear-cut choice. The majority system has been advocated for some time because of the success of the National League in its use. Another advantage of the majority system is that it is not complicated. It might be hard for the average student to digest without some effort on his part, but it has the virtue of requiring a decision.

At the meeting of the Institute Committee tomorrow night it is to be hoped that the question of elections will come up again. Most assuredly a new system that will act more fairly is needed. The present one is out of date. It allows the clique to elect the student body. It gives power to an organized few. This is not the purpose of elections. They should rather aim to put into official office that man that is most desired by the majority.

VARSIY BASEBALL

The Technology may, in the near future, be represented by a new electorial system. The new system is one requiring a primary ballot. The reason given was that the student body could not be reformed according to the rules of the polls.

Since then there has been much discussion on our electoral system. In the main it has been found inadequate. It allows the election of a candidate without the majority of those voting. In the past, the slate ballot, combined with a large number of candidates, has allowed the election of a man with less than a majority of the votes cast. Any one of his opponents could reasonably claim that he was defeated. It was thought that the majority system would mean a thoroughgoing choice for the popular candidate.

This difficulty the primary ballot does away with. Under it no man could be elected unless he had the majority of the votes. It also gives the student body a clear-cut choice. The majority system has been advocated for some time because of the success of the National League in its use. Another advantage of the majority system is that it is not complicated. It might be hard for the average student to digest without some effort on his part, but it has the virtue of requiring a decision.

At the meeting of the Institute Committee tomorrow night it is to be hoped that the question of elections will come up again. Most assuredly a new system that will act more fairly is needed. The present one is out of date. It allows the clique to elect the student body. It gives power to an organized few. This is not the purpose of elections. They should rather aim to put into official office that man that is most desired by the majority.

TECHNOLOGY may, in the near future, be represented by a new electorial system. The Technology may, in the near future, be represented by a new electorial system. The new system is one requiring a primary ballot. The reason given was that the student body could not be reformed according to the rules of the polls.

Since then there has been much discussion on our electoral system. In the main it has been found inadequate. It allows the election of a candidate without the majority of those voting. In the past, the slate ballot, combined with a large number of candidates, has allowed the election of a man with less than a majority of the votes cast. Any one of his opponents could reasonably claim that he was defeated. It was thought that the majority system would mean a thoroughgoing choice for the popular candidate.

This difficulty the primary ballot does away with. Under it no man could be elected unless he had the majority of the votes. It also gives the student body a clear-cut choice. The majority system has been advocated for some time because of the success of the National League in its use. Another advantage of the majority system is that it is not complicated. It might be hard for the average student to digest without some effort on his part, but it has the virtue of requiring a decision.

At the meeting of the Institute Committee tomorrow night it is to be hoped that the question of elections will come up again. Most assuredly a new system that will act more fairly is needed. The present one is out of date. It allows the clique to elect the student body. It gives power to an organized few. This is not the purpose of elections. They should rather aim to put into official office that man that is most desired by the majority.

VARSIY BASEBALL

The Technology may, in the near future, be represented by a new electorial system. The new system is one requiring a primary ballot. The reason given was that the student body could not be reformed according to the rules of the polls.

Since then there has been much discussion on our electoral system. In the main it has been found inadequate. It allows the election of a candidate without the majority of those voting. In the past, the slate ballot, combined with a large number of candidates, has allowed the election of a man with less than a majority of the votes cast. Any one of his opponents could reasonably claim that he was defeated. It was thought that the majority system would mean a thoroughgoing choice for the popular candidate.

This difficulty the primary ballot does away with. Under it no man could be elected unless he had the majority of the votes. It also gives the student body a clear-cut choice. The majority system has been advocated for some time because of the success of the National League in its use. Another advantage of the majority system is that it is not complicated. It might be hard for the average student to digest without some effort on his part, but it has the virtue of requiring a decision.

At the meeting of the Institute Committee tomorrow night it is to be hoped that the question of elections will come up again. Most assuredly a new system that will act more fairly is needed. The present one is out of date. It allows the clique to elect the student body. It gives power to an organized few. This is not the purpose of elections. They should rather aim to put into official office that man that is most desired by the majority.