YOU MEN WHO SMOKE

M. G. RAMESTAN has made but one request of the Intestitute student body and that one was to refrain from smoking in the corridors of the buildings. This request was prompted by the unsightliness of the corridors littered with cigarette butts. On the basis of this the Institute Committee passed a regulation that students ceasing to smoke in the corridors, in places and for some time it was splendidly observed.

Not so now. Men are constantly and flagefully violating this regulation. It is a very rash thing for someone to be found smoking in the corridors, in the class rooms, the drawing rooms, anywhere a man can unconsciously do it. The situation is deplorable, and the results are worse. It is not to be believed that the men do this to draw the attention of the women. The fact is that they are unaware that their acts are in violation of the point of honor and a certain degree of respect. The purpose of the regulation is to prevent smoking from not having been brought to their attention, or at least, not in an impressive enough manner.

The Institute Committee is to be commended for its recommendations to exclude all outside charity organizations from solicitations in the Institute corridors. Present conditions most emphatically demand that charity begin at home.

WE ARE ONLY HUMAN

A GATHERING of supposedly educated people assembled, a while ago, to discuss college men, ladiesunder the delusion that they would discover something of immeasurable value to the younger generation. Realizing that it was difficult to find anything new and startling, they had recourse to the time-worn method of gaining cheap publicity: they stated that about half of America's college men are mediocre. We feel ourselves complimented by the fact that we are at least semi-intelligent, which, judging by the statement, seems to have been wire-granted considerations of the people, places or on a plane somewhat above all.

The promises use of the term mongon long ago became frequent and hackneyed. Anyone not just to use is called a user of one of general principles. It is frequently difficult for the accused person to act in time, because of the amount of time he has been called upon to act in this respect. As he seldom has access to a newspaper through which he may deny the accusation.

In one case, Professor Charles G. Shaw, of New York University has come out on the side of the college undergraduates. He says that now the solon has been published, colleges offer the best target for those reformers who want to change everything. He says that there is no way of doing this except to try to educate: rather than contrary. In saying that students "have more evidence for knowledge than their teachers can possess." Professor Shaw endeavors to outline a trifle more clearly.

It is good to know, however, that the poor maligned students have shown some intelligence. For two years, with much ado, they have taken the middle course and admit that we are human. We are not morons, but we do not claim to be supermen. True enough that some students have many mental faults, and as a few us are usually stupid, but most of us are nearly normal. Why can't our critics realize this and cease taking for

HYGENIST CLAIMS MEN WEAR EXCESS CLOTHES

Fifteen floors are flapping planes of orderliness and serenity in dormitories, without constant reminders from superintendents instead of belts—this was the vision ignobly for by Dr. Thomas L.25, the former president of the New York City Board of Health, in an address before the National Democratic Club Sat-

In speaking on the topic, "How to be Happy Through the Physics of Sex," the question, "What is the matter with the results of his clothes?" One word sufficed to answer the query:
