Cap. Drew Fails to Score by Inches with 35 Pound Weight—Is Nosed Out by Colby of Cornell Delegation

Technology was shut out of the score column when the George town boxers were downed by the stiffest and fastest competition in years. The cream of the collegiate track accounted for the New Haven trackrooms with three of them to go on the books as world’s marks. The representatives of the Cardinal and gray were downed near the point score killers but lacked the extra punch to account for places.

We turn first to the 70 yard dash to qualify for the extra outfielders. In this bracket the Flying Sophs failed to come through in the last minute. With Miller of Harvard, the winer of the event last year, unable to get into the finals when he was disabled from a stumble in the middle of the sprint, Bilakse reeled in the first place with a 10.6 second time after going through his preliminary heat of 10.5 seconds.

Drew Fails to Score by Inches

In the pole vault, Bilakse was not up against the world’s record. He needed some stretching out before he could break in a world’s mark. He scored 13 feet 6 inches, and, second, Anson, cleared 12 (10.3), third, Jones, 11.5. Bilakse’s record was a tremendous improvement after about his personal best of 13 feet 2 inches.

Bilakse, rech, 1-0.
