BASEBALL TEAM TO NEED $1200 MORE THAN PLANNED

Drive For Funds Is Authorized by Institution's Last Night

NEW SONG TO BE TRIED

Mezzo to Substitute "Cortez of M.I.T." For "Stein Song" Is Voted Down

T. W. Owen 24

EDWARD McKENNA

President of Technology, makes the announcement.

"The only news organization that has been of any value to me," said Edward McKenna, Eastern Division Superintendent of the Associated Press, to describe his organization at the opening session of the annual meeting of the American Press Association at the Hotel Statler, New York, yesterday. "I am glad that in these days of increasing cost, the Associated Press has been able to maintain a distribution in excess of $50 million per month, and I am glad that the Associated Press is doing what it is doing.

"For centuries the news has been the same, but the medium of its distribution has changed. The Associated Press was founded in 1849, and the first news service was as important then as it is today. The Associated Press has been able to maintain its distribution in excess of $50 million per month, and I am glad that the Associated Press is doing what it is doing."

Edward McKenna received his first experience in newspaper work as a clerk in the Associated Press office in Washington, D. C., and later became a labor correspondent for the Associated Press in Chicago. He has been associated with the Associated Press for 25 years, and is the first United States correspondent of the Associated Press in New York. He is a member of the Associated Press Board of Managers.

Edward McKenna was graduated from Georgetown University, and later became a reporter for the Washington Star. He later became a correspondent for the Associated Press in Chicago, and later became a labor correspondent for the Associated Press in New York. He has been associated with the Associated Press for 25 years, and is the first United States correspondent of the Associated Press in New York. He is a member of the Associated Press Board of Managers.

Edward McKenna was graduated from Georgetown University, and later became a reporter for the Washington Star. He later became a correspondent for the Associated Press in Chicago, and later became a labor correspondent for the Associated Press in New York. He has been associated with the Associated Press for 25 years, and is the first United States correspondent of the Associated Press in New York. He is a member of the Associated Press Board of Managers.

Edward McKenna was graduated from Georgetown University, and later became a reporter for the Washington Star. He later became a correspondent for the Associated Press in Chicago, and later became a labor correspondent for the Associated Press in New York. He has been associated with the Associated Press for 25 years, and is the first United States correspondent of the Associated Press in New York. He is a member of the Associated Press Board of Managers.

Edward McKenna was graduated from Georgetown University, and later became a reporter for the Washington Star. He later became a correspondent for the Associated Press in Chicago, and later became a labor correspondent for the Associated Press in New York. He has been associated with the Associated Press for 25 years, and is the first United States correspondent of the Associated Press in New York. He is a member of the Associated Press Board of Managers.