Seek Process for Making Alcohol to Compete with German Product

Chemical Engineering Research Lab Is Now Working on The Problem

"An attempt is being made by the Research Department of Chemical Engineering to perfect a process that will allow the manufacturers of wood alcohol in this country to compete with the new German process of making methyl alcohol, Professor R. T. Hazen of the Department said yesterday.

Starting a number of years ago the Germans conceived the idea of trying to bring about certain gas reactions under very high pressures to 10,000 to the square inch, which has recently been discovered under normal pressures. During the war Germany used this idea in making nitrogen mustard.

New Catalogue Will Appear Before Exams

It is expected that the new catalogue of courses for next year will make its appearance during the first part of June, probably before the examinations start, according to Registrar J. C. Madison. There will be very few changes in the required subjects for each course. The only difference will be that the time for each course will be divided up so that it will be possible to give automatically the same instruction under the new system as under the old.
