THE INSTITUTE PRESENTS—

THIS freshman Lecture begins tomorrow afternoon for two purposes: first, to acquaint the new men with a few of the old-time traditions, and procedure of the Institute; second, to give a comprehensive survey of the scientific facts, thereby aid in the selection of courses. In short, it is purported that they orient the men and also stimulate them. As such, they are to be substantially enjoyable and thoroughly valuable.

It is strangely true that a number of men some sly soul begins to manufacture a text-book which will be in the hands of the new men over the vacation. That this is overcome in several years is evidenced by the very enthusiastic attendance at the first meeting. That they may be convinced that they need not wait until their senior year to sum up the experience and initiative necessary to the tasks that they might find themselves in these freshman Lectures would become the most important of the four years.

The aim of the men in this respect is that they themselves will perceive the importance of it and make an effort to support their seniors who will keep alive the tradition. If the freshmen in these freshmen Lectures would become as valuable as the sophomores, it would be an added inducement for all to be interested in the future of the Institute.

A review of The Open Forum shows that the men in the dormitories have been reading these issues more voraciously than any other group. As to their criticism, the very few points of view which they mention are important; that the men in the fresman dormitories could be more articulate and less critical. It is urged that fuller advantage be made of this opportunity for a general expression of opinion. Here is a chance to show your power to write, your skill in argument, your appreciation of the difference between right and wrong. Let it be now or never. Let it come from you and be heard.

As We Like It

COLONIAL

Monday night the Colonial Theatre featured for the first time "Peacocks of the Palace," a new comedy by Langston Hughes and Jas.A. The biggest recommendation for it is that it is a very good play. The comedy is rather low-brow for the better tastes of the audience, but it is a welcome change from the usual fare.

The comedy is an old-fashioned one, with its stock characters and situations. The acting is not very good, but the play is well enough to hold interest. The lighting is good, and the playing is adequate. The play is a must for those who enjoy a good laugh.

The set is very well done, and the costumes are appropriate. The actors are all well cast, and the dialogue is witty. The play is well received by the audience, and it is a success. The play is a must for those who enjoy a good laugh.

Library Ready to Render Service to Students Who Wish to Use Its Facilities

(The following article has been contributed by the library officials in order that the students, especially the senior students, may have a better understanding of the facilities offered by the Institute Library.)

A warm welcome to the Institute Library is extended to all students by the Librarian, Professor W. N. Seaver, a trained and experienced Library officer, who is eager to help them find the exact books or periodical articles they require. Notices of any desk are sent immediately to the students.

Those who are not familiar with the Library should have the following facts helpful in getting along with it:

1. The Central Library occupies the entire fifth floor of building 26 and is easily reached by the elevator. The Library is open from 9 a.m. to 11 p.m., week days except Saturdays, when it closes at 6. The Reading-Room is a handsome copy of the old library at Harvard, the dome being 50 feet in diameter.

2. "What must I do in order to get a book?" It is a frequently heard question. The answer is simple. Go to the office desk and register on a card with the Librarian. He will then sign your name on the card, and the book you require will be sent to you.

3. "What books can I not read?" It is not possible to agree on a list. It depends on the taste of the reader. To the Librarian, a book is simply a book. You may read it if you like.

4. "What books should I read?" They include the Institute Library, the Tuebingen Library, the University Library, and the Library of Congress.

5. "What are the hours of the Library?" The Library is open from 9 a.m. to 11 p.m., week days except Saturdays, when it closes at 6.

6. "What do I do to get a book?" You sign your name on the card with the Librarian. He will then sign your name on the card, and the book you require will be sent to you.

7. "What are the hours of the Library?" The Library is open from 9 a.m. to 11 p.m., week days except Saturdays, when it closes at 6.

8. "What are the hours of the Library?" The Library is open from 9 a.m. to 11 p.m., week days except Saturdays, when it closes at 6.
