FIELD DAY ENTHUSIASM

Those who have denied the existence of class and school spirit have been treated to a surprise during the past few days. The enthusiastic field day spirit that seeped through the Institute long ago has been revived by the students of the last class to meet such a stage. The songs of the last class were mingled with the songs of other classes from the first class to the last. The spirit that once flourished in the field day of the past has returned to the Institute, and it is more to be encouraged than condemned. The destruction of class spirit is not only in the nature of a personal conflict, but it is also in the nature of a struggle between the individual and the group. When a man attacks each other is any criterion, each of the two is more important. The freedom of the individual is wiser than the freedom of the group. The individual is free to make his own decisions, and the group is free to make its own decisions. When a man attacks each other is any criterion, each of the two is more important.
