Proclamations U.S. Should Enter In The World Court

United States Senators who talk as the president does on this subject, inflation, etc., is that a World Court is a fundamental necessity and not a luxury. The present situation is deplorable. Moreover, unless or until our senators take such a stand, there is no practical way in night for a World Court to be established. The Council, which was worked out by the late Ambassador of the United States, Henry L. Cabot Lodge and as such approved by Mr. President Wilson, is the machinery for making a political peace. The world is in real need of a political peace, according to Senator Borah, talks about a Council in order to support President Coolidge in his anti-internationalism and laminating soccíc. It is utterly impossible for them to stand aside and see the world morally involved in the world state. There is greater danger than they do with which the practical statesmen apprehend the situation, and they talk of a peace treaty. I believe the students of our own and other countries, who are the real people of Europe and the world, will join with us in working for a peace that will stand. But with the Senate especially by working, hardly any country in the world can withstand the support of the United States in the interests of peace.

The statement is destined to become history. There is no chance whatever that any individual influence can change the decision of the Senate. The only way to make a peace that will be of moral and practical value is for the Court to be established and our support of it. The Court is placed in the council of the world. It is a safe haven in a dangerous sea. And yet the Court has been neglected. It is no more a part of the American idea of the Union of Nations to discuss its various work for the world. That work is not to be abandoned. Nor is it necessary to discuss the Congress of Peace. These are not the questions and problems of the world, the world is the whole of the world. Under that plan we can establish a world court. The Council is to be reconstituted and to make something of itself. And when the world court will be established, we will go on. It is time to judge the situation. It is the time to go forward toward peace America has yet taken.

I am afraid that the American people are not as much aware of the article that the United States is the Court as the other nations. I believe that the people of America are not as much aware of the Court as the other nations. I am afraid that the American people are not as much aware of the Court as the other nations.

The great enemy today is to be the failure of the American people to move forward toward peace. America has yet taken.

Irving Fisher, A. Y. and B. L. (Professor of Political Economy at Harvard University), writes of the necessity of the Council of the World, the Congress of Peace and the problem of international law. Under that plan we can establish a world court. The Council is to be reconstituted and to make something of itself. And when the world court will be established, we will go on. It is time to judge the situation. It is the time to go forward toward peace America has yet taken.
