Technology's miles relay team, consisting of Cy Meagher, Howlett, Bennett and Capt. Leness, defeated the Harvard tech, the Anchor having about 4 yards to spare over French easy, coming last man for the crimson team, and with this victory, the Techs won 100% against 10% for Harvard and 14% unopposed to capture field from a home field of out.

Perhaps the greatest Technology in the Harvard valley, the ease was a man, Cy Meagher, who had the misfortune of getting to Harvard. Howlett, back and track to the second corner, where Meagher slowly forced ahead of the crimson man. The positions remain unchanged during the second lap, and on the last lap by opened up a head Giff by a scant foot lead, Howlett held the lead for the last 120 yards, and Meagher, the man for Harvard, passed the Techs and handed the stick to Carl Lenzell with a lead over the crimson, just reversing the positions in the previous case.

Leness Leads Kane
Howlett, next Tech man to run, sprinted fast, the anchor having been strong and set out after the first prominent. However, Howlett barely gained on him and the two runners remained about even for about seven tenths of a mile, when George Leness and Ted Kaiser were well out of the race. To pick up the battle.

Howlett passed the baton to the second man in the race, which was
