FAMOUS GRADUATE EXPRISES SUDDENLY

Was Noted Architect Who Designed Museum of Fine Arts in Boston

Guy Lowell '94, one of Boston's foremost architects, died recently in an automobile accident in Delphi, Spain. Dr. Lowell, who was 50 years old, was on his way to Madrid, and was thrown from his car when it rammed another car on the Madrid highway.

Mr. Lowell was a member of the famous Lowell family of New England, and a cousin of A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard. He received his degree of Bachelor of Science in 1894. He continued his studies at Harvard, and went to Paris, where he had the distinction of being awarded a diploma at the Municipal College. Because of his love of outdoor life he made a careful study of landscape gardening in addition to his regular architectural work, with the result that he made a careful study of landscape gardening in addition to his regular architectural work, with the result that he became an expert in the field. In 1900 he was a special lecturer on this subject at the Institute, receiving his degree of Architectural Engineering in 1913.

Because of his love of outdoor life and a keen interest in the arts, he made a careful study of landscape gardening in addition to his regular architectural work, and became an expert in the field. In 1900 he was a special lecturer on this subject at the Institute, receiving his degree of Architectural Engineering in 1913.

Notice of Death

The death of Guy Lowell, one of the most prominent architects of our time, was announced in Boston this week. Mr. Lowell was a member of the famous Lowell family of New England, and a cousin of A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard. He received his degree of Bachelor of Science in 1894. He continued his studies at Harvard, and went to Paris, where he had the distinction of being awarded a diploma at the Municipal College. Because of his love of outdoor life he made a careful study of landscape gardening in addition to his regular architectural work, with the result that he became an expert in the field. In 1900 he was a special lecturer on this subject at the Institute, receiving his degree of Architectural Engineering in 1913.

Notice of Death

The death of Guy Lowell, one of the most prominent architects of our time, was announced in Boston this week. Mr. Lowell was a member of the famous Lowell family of New England, and a cousin of A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard. He received his degree of Bachelor of Science in 1894. He continued his studies at Harvard, and went to Paris, where he had the distinction of being awarded a diploma at the Municipal College. Because of his love of outdoor life he made a careful study of landscape gardening in addition to his regular architectural work, with the result that he became an expert in the field. In 1900 he was a special lecturer on this subject at the Institute, receiving his degree of Architectural Engineering in 1913.

Notice of Death

The death of Guy Lowell, one of the most prominent architects of our time, was announced in Boston this week. Mr. Lowell was a member of the famous Lowell family of New England, and a cousin of A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard. He received his degree of Bachelor of Science in 1894. He continued his studies at Harvard, and went to Paris, where he had the distinction of being awarded a diploma at the Municipal College. Because of his love of outdoor life he made a careful study of landscape gardening in addition to his regular architectural work, with the result that he became an expert in the field. In 1900 he was a special lecturer on this subject at the Institute, receiving his degree of Architectural Engineering in 1913.